

GALLS THREE PARENTHESIS.
A Universalist's Classification of Some of His Episcopal Brothers.

The Rev. Charles E. Eaton, D. D., in the church of the Divine Pianist yesterday morning, attacked the remonstrants in the Episcopal Church who are protesting against the invitation of non-Episcopal clergymen to minister at special services in Episcopal churches. His text was no less than "Woe unto you, scribes and pharisees, hypocrites!" He also described the extreme reverence for external religious form that had been manifested in the making of the responses as "ecclesiastical mint and coining," and said: "The desire is public to condemn and, if necessary, to expel from their positions of influence several of the most zealous and devout ministers of the city because of assumed violation of the letter of the canon law. Men whose names in all public questions had made them worthy of notice on the part of the church and nation, and association to be of great ecclesiastical value, raised to the heat by the breath of fanaticism and persons who were educated and with whose theological doctrine and government they are in sympathy. There can be no objection to the removal of such a well-qualified and zealous man as a well-qualified and zealous member of the church. The only true church of Christ, the church of the apostles, has its bishops have regularly succeeded to the apostles; that his ministers are not only divinely commissioned but have authority to christen and baptize, to administer the rites of the church; and when it is asserted that all other churches are sectarian and schismatical, it is only to show that they are not.

"The logical position of the extreme high churchmen is that of the Roman Catholic churchmen, that their doctrine is contrary to the teaching of the gospel, and eminently heretical. They are not to be tolerated for ever in the New Testament."

In concluding, Dr. Eaton said: "Let us save a greater church which we are honor for its service to God and man, than that which comes from the hands of Hagelkerke Ge Assunta His Landlord.

Dona Gia, a rambler, living at Nancio's Boarding house, 157 Spring street, his head and hand covered with blood-stained bandages, was a prisoner in Jefferson Market Police Court yesterday charged with assaulting Gior, who is St. Vincent's Hospital. Mrs. Gior says that Gia got drunk on Saturday when he was sick and was about to insulted her. She was sent to the hospital, where she was treated for a week. Gia is 30 years old, but he made a good fight as he could, and after his arrest three subordinates in Gia's head had to be removed. Gia is a native of Sicily and has a wife and face, and it is thought his skull is fractured. When Gia was searched at the police station it was found that he had $100 in his pockets, with bank notes, sewn up in his waistband.

He was without bail to await the return of Gia's injuries.

Report to Suspect Incardination.

Babina Bercomister, the housekeeper of Babcock street, awoke early yesterday morning to find smoke in her apartment and the reflection of flames on the partition. She hurriedly ran out into the hall and ran down the hallway of the fourth floor. He was smoking a cigarette and watching a small pile of trash burn. Gia was about to go to the window when Bercomister spoke to him. No damage was done, but the families who live in the building regard Gieben with suspicion.
